My favorite photo of my family is from a few years ago. My youngest son, no more than six months old, is snuggled in my husband's lap. My eldest sits next to them, a slight smile revealing the dimple in his left cheek. And our big blond dog is resting his head on my husband's shoulder. It's not a posed picture, but what I treasure is the love it captures. Two boys—and a dog—secure in the knowledge that their dad will do anything for them. Some of us are lucky enough to have dads who make us feel that way—safe, loved, supported. And it's not just dads who father—it's also the teachers, coaches, uncles, grandfathers, and friends who show up for us. No matter what kind of dad or dad figure you have, or what they have taught you, they deserve to be celebrated. We have curated a list of gift ideas to help you honor your dad and your unique relationship.

If your dad is like my husband, he shows his love by cooking for his family. He's never too busy to whip up his amazing meat sauce for our boys. This lamp with a design inspired by Greek architecture in a deep shade of blue would be a stylish way keep his favorite room smelling great after a long day in front of the stove.
